For fraternities to survive, they needed to do four separate but related things: Footsteps in the Sands of Time the task of acquiring insurance out of the hands of the local chapters and place it in the hands of the vast national organizations; develop procedures and policies that would transfer as much of their liability as possible to outside parties; find new and creative means of protecting their massive assets from juries; and-perhaps most important of all-find a way of indemnifying the national and local organizations from the dangerous and illegal behavior of some of their undergraduate members. These, however, are defects of very little importance ; they are seldom noticed ; and when they are, they can readily be supplied. The same symptoms are...
